

OHR Guide To: Parental Leave

This guide provides an overview of the resources available to employees for pregnancy/childbirth, adoption, surrogacy, and foster care purposes.

Making a Plan

As soon as practicable after you have determined you have a need for parental leave, OHR recommends preparing a leave plan and sitting down with your supervisor to review. Leave requests must be made to and approved by your supervisor.

Leave Types

- Annual Leave
 - Can be used for bonding with a healthy child, as well as sick leave purposes.
 - Requires supervisory approval.
- Sick Leave
 - Can be used for childbirth, recuperation, and taking care of a sick child after birth.
 - Employees are entitled to use accrued sick leave for pregnancy and childbirth, to care for a family member who is incapacitated due to pregnancy or childbirth, and for adoption or surrogacy purposes.
 - In the case of adoption or surrogacy, can be used for: appointments with attorneys, court proceedings, any required travel, any periods of time during which the employee is ordered or required by the court to take time off from work to care for the child, and any other activities necessary to allow the adoption to proceed.
- Family Medical Leave Act (FMLA)
 - To be eligible, must have been a federal employee for 12 months.
 - FMLA, an unpaid leave status, provides up to 12 weeks of job protection for the birth of a son or daughter and the care of that newborn child; for the placement of a son or daughter with the employee for adoption or foster care, or after surrogacy; and for serious medical conditions.
 - Childbirth and recuperation, as well as incapacitation related to the pregnancy before childbirth, generally qualify as serious medical conditions under FMLA.
 - Employees can substitute paid leave (their own or donated, if they have exhausted their leave) while under FMLA.
 - Employees can use FMLA to bond with a healthy child, but can only substitute annual leave for this purpose.
- Leave Sharing Programs
 - Voluntary Leave Transfer Program (VLTP): Donations are made from one federal employee directly to the NIH employee in need. Note that the amount of leave received may not meet the level of need.
 - Leave Bank: When you become a member of the Leave Bank, it can provide a more reliable source of paid leave donations than VLTP because approved recipients draw from a pooled fund of annual and restored annual leave up to the Leave Bank's annual cap, and do not need to rely on direct donations from co-workers.

- Leave Sharing Guidelines

- Childbirth and recuperation, as well as any incapacitation related to the pregnancy before childbirth, generally qualify as serious medical conditions for leave sharing programs.
- An employee can receive assistance from both leave sharing programs simultaneously.
- It is important to note that in order to receive donated leave from either program, an employee must be projected to go into a non-pay status for at least 24 work hours.
- Neither VLTP nor the Leave Bank can be utilized to bond with a healthy child – this includes after adoption or surrogacy and during foster care.

- Advanced Leave

- In appropriate circumstances, a supervisor may approve either advanced sick or annual leave upon request by the employee.
- An employee may be advanced up to 240 hours of sick leave depending on the basis for the request, and may be advanced no more than the amount of annual leave they would otherwise accrue by the end of the leave year.
- Advanced leave must be repaid, unless the employee dies, retires for disability, or is separated/resigns because of disability.
